Welcome to your national forests and grasslands!

America's national forests and grasslands offer the single largest source of outdoor recreation opportunities in the United States. Downhill skiing, whitewater rafting, hiking, fishing, rock climbing, camping, quiet reflection—the recreational opportunities abound. From the icefields of Alaska to the tropical rainforest of Puerto Rico, these 193 million acres belong to you, the American public, and their management and care have been entrusted to the Forest Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture. The Forest Service accomplishes its motto "caring for the land and serving people" through wise use and stewardship practices, cutting-edge research programs, and State and private forestry programs.

The national forests and grasslands are truly America's Great Outdoors. Cherish and enjoy your land legacy!

The Forest Service—Caring for the Land and Serving People

The Forest Service enriches the lives of Americans in many ways through management of the national forests and grasslands, forestry research, and cooperation with forest managers on State and private lands. The Forest Service is dedicated to multiple-use management for the sustained yield of renewable resources such as water, forage, wildlife, wood, and recreation. Multiple-use means managing resources under the best combination of uses to benefit the American people while ensuring the productivity of the land and protecting the quality of the environment.

Forest Service Research

The Forest Service provides the scientific and technical knowledge necessary to protect the Nation's natural resources on all lands, gain the maximum benefit from their use, and leave the environment unspoiled. Research is conducted through a network of research stations, the Forest Products Laboratory, and the International Institute of Tropical Forestry.

International Forestry

Through its International Programs Staff in Washington, DC, the Forest Service plays a key role in formulating policy and coordinating U.S. support for the protection and sound management of the world's forest resources. It works closely with other U.S. agencies such as the Agency for International Development, the U.S. Department of State, and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, as well as with nonprofit development organizations, wildlife organizations, universities, and international assistance organizations. The Forest Service's international work has served to link people and communities striving to protect and manage forests throughout the world.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) prohibits discrimination in all its programs and activities on the basis of race, color, national origin, age, disability, and where applicable, sex, marital status, familial status, parental status, religion, sexual orientation, genetic information, political beliefs, reprisal, or because all or part of an individual's income is derived from any public assistance program. (Not all prohibited bases apply to all programs.) Persons with disabilities who require alternative means for communication of program information (Braille, large print, audiotape, etc.) should contact USDA's TARGET Center at (202) 720-2600 (voice and TDD). To file a complaint of discrimination, write USDA, Director, Office of Civil Rights, 1400 Independence Avenue, S.W., Washington, D.C. 20250-9410, or call (800) 795-3272 (voice) or (202) 720-6382 (TDD). North to Alaska! Evergreen forests blanket rugged snow-capped mountains, rushing streams teem with salmon, and icebergs the size of office buildings calve from glaciers into the sea. Camp along historic gold rush trails, watch eagles soar above forests from the comfort of a passenger ship, or kayak the shoreline of a quiet fjord. Your national forests in Alaska are a special reason to visit America's "Last Frontier."
